Mission Moment

At Africa University, Pierre honed his skills in an intensive English class. He was the class representative in a class of 96 students from 5 countries. He was able to organize, for the first time, an intensive English church service. Pierre also served as a leader for master's students and as a student coordinator for the Africa University choir.

In September 2012, when Pierre was in his last semester of the MBA program, his Bishop appointed him director of Communications and Development for the Central Congo Episcopal Area.

Pierre credits Africa University with awarding him much more than a degree. He has seen "love" in action and promised to serve the church that gave him a scholarship to go to Africa University. Next on his agenda was earning a doctoral degree and his dream is to teach at Africa University.

Now, Pierre married with 3 children, directs the United Methodist Communications in the Congo Central Conference. He is an active member of the conference's United Methodist Young Adult Fellowship and also chairs the worship and music committee of the United Methodist International English Church.

Thousands of Africa University alumni like Pierre reach their academic dreams and offer rich leadership for church and society. Africa University has developed into a distinguished center of academic excellence and an institution of choice for leadership development in Africa.
