Mission Moment

Education was something that John Wesley was devoted to throughout his lifetime. Not only did he read and study Scripture and theology, he also was very well read in science and medicine.

Wesley, a lifelong learner, also started schools and sought to provide opportunities for education to those in the Methodist movement. This commitment to education is still present in the Methodist movement today. This includes the commitment of The United Methodist Church to Africa University.

Africa University was founded in 1988 after a unanimous vote by the United Methodist General Conference. Students from across the continent of Africa are able to attend the University. Those students not only expand their opportunities, but also are being equipped to expand the potential of their entire communities.

Students at Africa University are becoming leaders and teachers in ways that can transform their communities across the continent. This legacy and mission is made possible by our continued faithful gifts to the Africa University Fund.
