Mission Moment

At the moment when it seems that people cannot agree on what is best for our nation and for our world, when we cannot even seem to agree-to disagree- and we seem to be divided on every issue brought before us, The United Methodist Church is holding onto unity as an ideal.

Not only is there work being done within the church to maintain unity, but The United Methodist Church also is connected outside of the church in cooperation with churches of other denominations. This connection is such a priority that the Interdenominational Cooperation Fund is one of our seven apportionments.

Some of the work that has been accomplished by working together is the AIDS initiative in Africa, hurricane recovery efforts, and work against substance abuse and violence.

The United Methodist Church is committed to working together with churches and organizations of other denominations that we might find the life of God together as we seek to carry out the work of the Gospel.
